

Monday, March 29

Open your heart and close your eyes: beyond, on the far side of the horizon, thousands upon thousands of men, women, and children walk between heaven and earth. They cannot see you, but it is important to them that you should see them. They cannot speak to you, but it is important to them that we should speak with each other. They come from the darkest exile of our history. They march toward an invisible sanctuary formed of names and letters of fire. Do not turn away from them.... They are our brothers and sisters; they are our parents. They hear our promises and our visions: they are Jacob's ladder linking the Throne on high to the tragedies on earth.

Elie Weisel and Albert H. Friedlander